ABOUT US

The story began in 1948, in Shibamata, Tokyo. About 70 years ago, Mitsumori Kuriki, the founder, and his wife started with a bell factory. As time went by, we began to make new types of equipment and facilities and started to manufacture more products in quantity and variation. That is how the KURIKI Manufacture is started.

By 1999, we acquired ISO9001, an international standard quality management system. We believe that the best products come not only by one's skill but should also be supported by a well-structured organization and standardized manuals. Nowadays, the production is focused on making architectural hardware and bathroom accessories, such as door levers, hinged and sliding door fixtures, toilet paper holders, towel bars, etc.

QUALITY

With a solid commitment to helping everyone live more comfortably by producing high-quality Japanese products, we always listen to our valued customer needs and call an immediate response to act. This is made possible because we have in-house product development, manufacturing, sales, and inexpensive materials supported by our subsidiary company in China. This management system allows us to distribute the demand for well-balanced cost, high-quality products in a relatively short time.

DESIGN

We understand that a good product does not only mean well-functioning. A good product should cover safety, universality, and aesthetically pleasing design. We always put our best effort into creating a product that can cover all of those fields, and several times now, our products have won the Good Design Award and achieved 167 patents and utility models.

Good Design Award is the only award in Japan that evaluates design comprehensively. This award is a movement to encourage industries to create a product with better design. For several times, KURIKI products have recognized as a product that has a good design which at the same time can create a better quality of life.
